Porto Alegre is the capital of the state of Rio Grande do Sul, in southern Brazil. In the main square, Praça Marechal Deodoro, is the Renaissance-style Metropolitan Cathedral, with religious murals on its exterior. Palazzo Piratini has a neoclassical style and is the seat of the state government. Nearby is the Teatro de San Pedro, which dates back to the 19th century. The city is known for being an access route to the high canyons of the Recortados de la Sierra National Park.

Porto Alegre is the sixth largest gateway for foreigners in Brazil. Among the main tourist sites in the city are the Monument to the Lazador (at the entrance to the city) and the Gasometer Plant. The sunset on the Guaíba is also another of Porto Alegre's attractions.

Canoas is a municipality in the state Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil. It is located at a distance of 20 km north of Porto Alegre, by road. It belongs to the metropolitan region of Porto Alegre.

The city ranks third among the gaúcho municipalities by population.

Some of her commutes to Porto Alegre every day for her jobs. Many people take advantage of their daily trips to Porto Alegre to enjoy the great cultural billboard of the state capital, perhaps that is why the cultural initiatives in Canoas are few.
